

I Hi, everyone, and welcome to the segment of all about cats. My name is Mayrim and I'm going to be your host today. You may love your cats, but you may not fully be aware of just how cool they really are.

For example, did you know that cats have an extra organ that allows them to taste scents or that they developed meowing as a way to communicate exclusively with humans? Clearly, there's more to this little feline friend than meets the eye. So to help you fully appreciate how awesome cats are in this segment, we will be talking about fun and need to know information about cats.

Let's get started. A house cats genome is ninety five point six percent Tiger and they share many behaviors with their jungle ancestors. These behaviors include Santa marking by scratching, pray play, pray stalking, pouncing, shining and urine marking. Cats are supposed to have 18 toes, five toes on each from pop, four toes on each backpack. Cats have an extra organ that allows them to taste scents on the air, which is why your cat stares at you with their mouth open from time to time.

Despite popular belief, many cats are actually lactose intolerant, so milk is not going to be very good for them.

Have you ever noticed your cat staring at you and blinking slowly? This is actually called a kitty kiss. This movement shows contentment and trust. Cats may yawn as a way to end confrontation with another animal. Think of it as their talk to the hand gesture. Meowing is a behavior the cats developed exclusively to communicate with people. So they actually don't meow to other cats. A bit of history information. It turns out that Abraham Lincoln was a crazy cat president. He had four cats that lived in the White House with him.

Studies also suggest that domesticated cats first appeared around 3600 B.C and our descendant from the African Wildcats.

It is said that 200 feral cats prowl the park at Disneyland during their part to control rodents.

Of course, the ones who don't wear funny outfits and speak in squeaky voices. Don't worry. Mickey is safe. And finally, there are about 88 million pet cats in the United States, which makes the cat the most popular pet in the country. So what cats have about a rep for being pets? They have incredible history from being domesticated as far as 5000 years ago, ruling Egypt and later becoming the most popular pet in the United States. It's clear not much has changed for them.

We hope this presentation has caused you to learn more about them. Thank you for joining us, bye.
